2025 Impact At-A-Glance

A population spanning four counties has not stopped the Central Sandhills Extension team from delivering relevant, research-based instruction and programming in communities where agriculture remains a way of life.

Agriculture remains the backbone of the Sandhills economy, and Extension ensures ranchers have practical, research-based tools to maintain sustainable operations. Residents frequently work together to consolidate services or share resources across county lines. Extension directly supports this adaptive mindset by offering regionally delivered training — such as Private Pesticide Applicator and Beef Quality Assurance certifications. These programs ensure that even the most remote ranchers and land managers stay connected to the latest science and regulatory updates.
