

Booth Selected as ARDC Employee of the Year

Near Mead, NE – Ed Booth has been selected as the recipient of the 2010 Employee of the Year Award at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln Agricultural Research and Development Center (ARDC).

Sponsored by the social/benefits committee at the ARDC, fellow employees nominate candidates. Supervisors, employees and the committee then submit scoring forms.

Booth is an electrician with Facilities Operations at the ARDC and has worked at the center for over 30 years.

Also nominated were Ken Cejka, Rich Goodding, Deloris Pittman, Cheryl Sheary, and Rod Thorson.

Nominators for Booth stated that he, “Always is there to help at work or in his community, will go above and beyond to get anything done, and strives to provide excellent service to customers.”

In addition to receiving a plaque, Booth was also honored with prizes solicited and organized by the social/benefits committee at the ARDC. Prize donors included Behlen Manufacturing, Mead Cattle Company, and the Hilltop Country Club in Wahoo. Booth will also be recognized on a plaque displayed indefinitely at the ARDC August N. Christenson Research and Education Building.

This is the ninth year the award has been presented. Past winners can be viewed online at <http://ardc.unl.edu/eoy.shtml>.

The Agricultural Research and Development Center and UNL Extension are divisions of the University's Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources.

###

Photo: Ed Booth (left) was presented with the Employee of the Year plaque by Mark Schroeder, ARDC Director.